How to Always Find Romantic Presents for Your Wife or Girlfriend

We have a friend whose father once got her mother a pair of electric socks for Christmas. Another friend bought his wife a new iron.

Bad moves.

So, to insure that men are clear on this matter: never, ever, never, ever purchase your wife or girlfriend a practical gift. Even if she talks about how cold her feet are at night watching Tivo (see above). Or how the iron is scorching shirts now that it's eight years old.

Just say no. Walk away. Run away. Do. Not. Do. It.

Instead, you must always -- always -- give the love of your life romantic presents.

Men have a hard time with gifts. Men are practical. Men solve problems. And so men show their love by being practical and solving problems. (That father mentioned above? Showed his love to his daughter by buying her four new tires for those on her car that were going bald. That kind of gift from a dad to a daughter? That's OK, so long as it's not for Christmas).

But women? Women love romance. Women love the thought of romance. Women swear by "it's the thought that counts."

And there you have the key to romantic gift ideas for her: put some thought into it.

It needn't be a lot of thought. As The Mentalist says, "I just pay attention."

Are you out and about? Does your wife comment on a piece of costume jewelry she sees? Make a note of it.

Does she often say her favorite flowers are irises or gerberas daisies? Jot that down.

Is she a huge fan of old-time movie stars and you come across a framed shot of, for example, Clark Gable? You know what to do.

Romantic gift ideas for her abound. She's always telling you what she's interested and what she considers romantic all the time, even if she's not direct about it. A little attention is all that must be paid.

Do so and don't be surprised if the next time the love of your life opens one of your romantic presents she'll feel incredibly loved and cared for. How will you know? She'll utter something like this: "You remembered!"

There's little sweeter for a woman to know her man "paid attention."

You, my friend, have just hit the romantic-gifts-for-her jackpot! Your romantic presents will be arriving that night
